

Chapter 13 — Kṣetra-Kṣetrajña Yoga

క్షేత్రక్షేత్రజ్ఞవిభాగయోగః : క్షేత్రక్షేత్రజ్ఞవిభాగయోగము

"The Field & the Knower of the Field" · 35 verses · The Gītā's most direct teaching on the Witness Self

Chapter 13 opens Part III with a powerful distinction: the field (kṣetra) — the body and everything that arises in it (mind, intellect, ego, senses, emotions) — and the Knower of the Field (kṣetrajña) — the pure witnessing consciousness that observes all this without itself being any of it.

You are the Knower, not the field. This is the Gītā's most precise non-dual teaching. Everything you can experience — including your own thoughts and emotions — is "the field." What remains, experiencing it all, is what you really are.

Essential verses of Chapter 13

BG 13.2 The Knower of the Field in all fields is the Divine

"One who sees the Supreme Lord dwelling equally in all beings, the Imperishable in the perishable — he truly sees."

□ Essential take-away of Chapter 13

You are the witness, not what you witness.

Everything you can call "mine" — body, breath, thoughts, feelings, memories, personality — is part of the field. The one who knows them is you. This insight alone, lived in, brings freedom from suffering: whatever happens in the field, the Knower remains untouched.

And the next step: the same Knower is present in every body. To see this is to see truly (13.27).
